Hospitable Hearts Blog

I've set up a blog called "Hospitable Hearts for China." My latest post is a letter from a former student reacting to the recent tragedy in GuangDong province (see link at bottom).

Moved In

My new housemates love Jesus and are committed to praying together and growing in grace. We're making our little place as cheerful as possible so we can host, and are getting to know our neighbors just North of the University of Washington.

Pray With Me

Please see the attached prayer list.
Thank you in advance for praying!

Scholarly Baking

My friend Jenny visited this past week from Williamsburg. "Amy," a Chinese scholar, invited us to her apartment for tea after the weekly Talk Time. Amy is a beautiful person and a scholar in the field of cryptology. She'll soon be returning to China to be a professor. My new "crowd" is full of surprises and it's fascinating to get to know people in law, aerospace, public affairs, medicine, and other fields.

Later in the week we invited two students to bake cookies with us with a woman from church in my hometown. Though doctoral students, these two had never baked cookies and were literally taking notes!

Our hostess shared the story of how she and her husband met and how she came to trust Jesus. I'm excited to help create more opportunities like this and see what God will do.
